Overview

The FNSB was established in February 2022, through a series of school-community referenda. Eleven schools across Yukon chose to join the FNSB, enabling Yukon First Nations to assume shared authority with Government of Yukon in the delivery of public education. Our schools continue to follow the BC Curriculum, but we tailor programming, lesson delivery, and assessment methodology to reflect Yukon First Nations worldviews.

These schools are for all Yukon students and teachers. We promote reconciliation by enhancing a Yukon First Nations model that puts the student first, through a strengths-based and community-centered approach. We also support our teachers to adapt their strengths to thrive within this pedagogy. For each of our school communities, we will establish Community Committees which will guide the work of the school board for their school, ensuring an authentic collaboration with the people and First Nation most invested in their children's education.

This Strategic Plan guides the FNSB's efforts towards building this new public education system in the Yukon. Conventional strategic plans divide goals and objectives into discrete silos, making them difficult to implement. In this document, we present our plans and strategies in terms of their relationships, reciprocity, and responsibility, as well as the inter-relatedness with the land.

For millennia, Yukon First Nation people were nomadic. Generation after generation thrived because of our ability to closely read the land and pass on this deep understanding. For every harvesting and hunting season, and any journey throughout our traditional territories, our peoples relied on each other and our kin in the waters, mountains and forests around us by way of reciprocal relationships and respect.

As we take this journey to empower and inspire necessary changes in education, we honour our relationships with each other and trust that we can read the landmarks and blazes set for us by the land, our communities, our families and most importantly our learners.

This strategic plan is built through walking four intertwining "Trails", with recognizable "Landmarks" and "Blazes" as goals we aim to reach along the way. "Where We Are Going" describes our mission, and "Our Way" details our values that we keep with us and guide us as we go.

We welcome you to be on this journey with us.

The Strategic Plan
